EDITOR'S FOREWORD.

IN presenting to the public this "portrait gallery" of Canadian poets—an enlargement of a brochure published some sixteen years ago—the Editor does not claim to have included in it all who might be considered entitled to admission. Criticism doubtless will be made in some cases, on the ground either of inclusion or exclusion, but it is believed that the collection will be recognized as fairly representative of this department of Canadian literature. In the decade and a half which has passed since the publication of the first edition many strong, clear voices have joined the national chorus, and the Editor deems himself fortunate in having secured contributions from so many of these new singers.

The reader will not be surprised to observe how largely the Great War is reflected in these pages. A special interest attaches to the poems of Lieut.-Col. McCrae, Major Langstaff and Lieut. Trotter. The death of these gallant officers, while it has enriched the country's honor-roll of achievement and sacrifice, has at the same time robbed our literature of the riper product of powers rich in promise.

No apology need be made for giving to Charles Sangster the distinctive place he holds in the book. He has been called the "Father of Canadian Poetry," and there are few who will differ with the late Dr. Dewar in his estimate of Sangster's genius as "more truly Canadian than that of any other poet of distinction in this Province." For the photograph the Editor is indebted to Mr. Rod Sangster, of Montreal, a son of the poet; and for the poem to the late Mr. Charles H. Gould, M.A., Librarian of McGill University, to which institution the manuscript poems of Sangster, revised shortly before his death, were committed for keeping.

Through the kindness of Mrs. A. M. Tremaine, of this city, the Editor was permitted the use of a slight M.S.

book of poems of Joseph Scriven, author of "What a Friend we have in Jesus," on the inside of the back cover of which the poet had inscribed what without doubt would seem to be the first draft of his famous hymn. This little paper-bound book, comprising ten pages of poems written by his own hand, was given by the author to Mrs. Tremaine's father, the late John Charles Bennett, of Brantford, in the early '50's. Scriven was then living in that City, where for a time he conducted a private school for children, of which school Mrs. Tremaine in her early childhood was a pupil. The hymn as reproduced here (p. 129), it will be noticed, not only differs in some of the lines from the version in use to-day, but is lacking eight lines of the latter. There would seem to be no doubt that it is the hymn as originally composed by the author. As beyond question the best-known piece of Canadian literature, it is well worthy of a place in this collection.

Sincere thanks are due to the writers and to the friends of deceased writers whose generous co-operation has made this publication possible; also to the several publishers who have consented to the use of copyrighted poems. The kindly response from all quarters has made the task of collection, somewhat arduous in itself, a very real pleasure throughout. Acknowledgment also is gratefully made of the valuable assistance received from Mrs. Jean Blewett and Miss Helena Coleman. It is hoped that the taste here given may serve to whet the appetite of the reader for a closer acquaintance with the work of the writers represented in this little volume.

Toronto, 1919.

Laprovka.

The clouds roll over the pine trees,
 Like waves that are charged with fire;
 Golden and fiery tines, their crests,
 Ablaze with a gorgeous fire.

The sun has gone down in splendour,
 The heavens are wild with flames,
 And all the horizon is burning
 With colours that have no name.

And over the mighty forests
 The mystical hues are spread,
 Calm as the smiles of the angels,
 Still as the peaceful dead.

And the lakes, serene and thoughtful,
 And the river, deep in dreams;
 And the purple cliffs, in the distances
 Are robed with the glory-gleams.

Cha. Haugster.

Sic Transit Gloria.

For what of splendor or of fame
Can vaunt itself beneath the sun?
The race of myriads is new,
But Nature's face is ever the same.

The secret craft of Memphis' priest,
The grace of Athens, thews of Rome,
Sidonian triremes turning home,
The mellow wonder of the East, --

Who shall see them restored again?
The memory of their pride and shame
Held by the learned few, their name
Strange to the mass of modern men!

Along the great white roads of Time,
In spite of pomp and sneering lust,
Life's caravans are blown to dust,
And only Nature moves sublime.

Sympathy

Beside the graves new-rounderd sod
By some dear instinct close we come,
Heart draws to heart, tho' we are dumb,
And dumbly seek to share the rod.

We do not know what is to be,
We cannot guess, we cannot see;
We can but stand and wait for God.

As when the winter tempests fall
With blinding snow-weather on the steep,
And clouds and darkness dread appall,
What can they do, th' unknowing sheep.
But gather close and silence keep,
And listen for the Shepherd's call.

MARY JOSEPHINE BENSON

Noon-Day on Lake Ontario.

The sun strode laughing through the unguarded Heavens.
His dart to that death mortality but yesterday to the clouds,
Now idle, sportive, he shook at the fugitives herded on the horizon,
Fainting afar to the limbo of forms forgotten.
Oh, fiercely merry he rattled his half-full quiver
And into the sea-broad lake, a cap-hire fable,
He spilled ten thousand arrow-leads of glory!
So quenched he his ire and took his Victor's pleasure.

17

I saw the Lake leap up like Love's quick boom
At every barb's keen point a mortal splendor—
A wound, a star, a diadem of rainbows!
Ten thousand pangs the ecstatic water suffered;
Ten thousand shafts rained down through parting ethers
So marched the Conqueror-Wanton through his zenith.

Mary Josephine Benson.

LOVE'S LESSON.

Put self behind, turn tender eyes,
Keep back the words that hurt and sting,
We learn when sorrow makes us wise,
Forbearance is the grandest thing.

Be patient lest some day we turn
Our eyes on loved one fast asleep
In death, and whisper as we yearn:
"How often I have made you weep!"
"Some loved you not, and words let fall
That must have pierced your gentle breast,
But I - who loved you best of all -
Did hurt you more than all the rest!"

One lesson let us keep in mind,
To hold our dear ones close and fast -
Since loyal hearts are hard to find -
And Life and Love so soon are past.

Immortality

They are not dead, the soldier and the sailor,
Fallen for Freedom's sake;

They merely sleep with faces ~~that~~ are paler
until they wake.

They will not weep, the mothers, in the years
The future will decree;

For they have died that the battles and the tears
Should cease to be.

They will not die, the victorious and the slain,
Sleeping in foreign soil,

They gave their lives, but to the world is the gain
Of their sad toil.

They are not dead, the soldier and the sailor,
Fallen for Freedom's sake;

They merely sleep with faces that are paler
until they wake.

Calvary

The women stood and watched while thick, black night
Enclosed the awful tragedy. Afar
Three crosses stood, against a single bar
Of crimson-glowing, black-encircled light.
No hint of Easter dawn. In all the height
Of that dark heaven, not a single star
To whisper;— Love and Life the victors are.
It seemed to them that wrong had conquered night.

O ye who watch and wait, the night is long.
A curtain of spum fire and woven glooms
Across the mighty tragedy is drawn.
But soon your ears shall hear a triumph song,
And golden light shall touch each sacred tomb,
And voices shout at last— The Dawn! The Dawn!

Not unto Endless Dark."

Not unto endless dark do we go down!
Though all the wisdom of wide earth said, yea,
Yet my fond heart would thro' eternal nay.
Night, prophet of morning, wears her starry crown,
And jewels with-hope her murkiest shades that frown;
Death's doubt is kernelled in each prayer we pray,
Eternity—but night in some vast day
Of God's far-off, white flame of love's renewal.
Not unto endless dark! We may not-know
The distant deeps to which our hopes go,
The tidal shores where ebb our fleeting breath:—
But over all, and dread and doubts fell dart,
Sweet hope eternal holds the human heart,
And love laughs down the desolate dunks of death

Roadside Flowers

We are the roadside flowers,
 Shaping from garden grounds,
 Layers of idle hours,
 Breakers of ordered bounds.

If only the earth will feed us,
 If only the wind be kind,
 For blossom for those who need us,
 The shufflers left behind.

And lo, the Lord of the Garden,
 He makes his sun to rise,
 And his rain to fall like pardon
 On our dusty paradise.

On us he has laid the duty, —
 The task of the wandering breed, —
 To better the world with beauty,
 Wherever the way may lead.

Now shall inquire of the season,
 Or question the wind when it blows?
 For blossom and ask no reason.
 The Lord of the Garden knows.

My tears are less for the slain
In the battle of life,
Than for those that remain
Unwarned to the strife.

For those who ne'er have known
The warrior's share;
Ne'er frozen or flamed
With love and despair.

For hearts that know not to weep
Or bridle with scorn,
For souls still heavy with sleep
That perish unborn.

Faith, Hope and Charity

A star lean'd down and laid a silver hand
On the pale brow of Death—
Before it roll'd black shadows from the land
The star was Faith
—2.—

Across wild storms that hid the mountains far
In fume and cope;
Pursuing the black there sail'd a throbbing star,
The red star Hope!
—3.—

From God's east-palace a large sun grandly roll'd
Over land and sea
Its core pure fire, its stretching hands of gold
Great Charity!

Divine Guidance.

Lead Thou me on. My path is steep;
Beset with foes I cannot see—
Father Thy child in safety keep,
My strength is all from Thee.

When clouds and darkness round me close,
And fierce temptations sorely press,
Hold Thou my hand; repel my foes;
With calm endurance bless.

Forgive my timid, faithless fears;
Let trusting love my portion be,
Till safe from conflicts, doubts, & tears,
I rest above with Thee.

To The Aviators of LEASIDE and ARMOUR HEIGHTS

All summer long, your crowding planes
Shadowed the fields where droned the bee,
Or drowned the roar of rushing trains,
With engines purrring stertorously.

Banked white against a mottled sky,
Or lifted to the noonday blaze;
Singly, or like wild geese on high,
All day ye met our marvelling gaze.

Air as tinted dragon-flies,
One with the light and drifting wind;
So did your whirring shapes arise,
And leave the grovelling Earth behind.

Across deep lakes of molten gold
Where sunset's colours flushed and paled;-
Past purple peaks where angels fold
Their wings, your venturous pilots sailed!

And cried to us:- "Look up! Look up!
Ye blinded moles that haunt the shade-
Gaze on the Heavens' jewelled cup,
And praise the wonders God hath made!"

Cleaners of space, ye fear no foe,
The huge cloud-dragons ye out-race;
Or float serene o'er Earth below,
Like falcons poised in pride of place

Dismays of timid souls ye shame-
Your souls of fire no peril's shun;
Lo! ye, like moths that dare the flame,
Would heed the Angel in the sun!

A Little Philosophy

What is a world, my boy ⁷

A little rain, a little sun,
A little shore where ripples run,
A little green upon the hill,
A little glade, a little rill,
A little day with skies above,
A little night where shadows move,
A little work for men to do,
A little play for such as you;
A passing night, a coming morn,
A coming love, a passing scorn;
Of blackest cloud a little bit
With silver on the rim of it;
A little trouble, lots of joy—
And there you have a world, my boy

Bluebirds.

O magic music of the Spring, —
Across the morning's breezy meads
I hear the South wind in the reeds,
I hear the golden bluebirds sing.

O mellow music of the morn, —
Across the fading fields of Time
How many joyous songs are borne
From memory's enchanting chime,
I see the grasses shine with dew,
The comflowers gleaming in the grain,
And oh! the bluebirds sing — and you?
We fare together once again.

O haunting music of the dusk,
When silent birds are on the wing
And sweet is scent of pine and musk —
Oh! as we wander hand in hand
Along the shadow-painted land,
I hear the golden bluebirds sing.

No mother wept when thou didst take thy leave,
 No home hopes now in vain for thy return,
 No paddened family for months shall grieve.
 When from some messenger thy fate they learn
 Still thou art not unclaimed, for Britain knows
 That thou didst cross the world for sake of her,
 And thou, brave boy, art brother to all those Whom Freedom doth in these scarred fields inter.
 What was it made thee quit thy 'customed task,
 When War's shrill bugle woke thy quiet vale?
 Wouldst thou begin anew?—In vain we ask,
 But now where worth is known they bid thee 'Hail'.
 And what if to this old world thou wast strange,
 Down storied fields with heroes thou dost range.

ALFRED GORDON

AUTHOR OF "VIMY RIDGE AND OTHER POEMS."

Day after day no gun had spoken,
Night after night seemed peace unbroken:
But the roads in the faint star-light were black
With business for the great attack.

Night after night, with muffled clanks,
On their belies crept & crept the tanks;
Stone-still, like Saurian monsters there,
In the silhouette of a sudden place.

Though neither song nor cigarette
Cheered the regiments as they met,
They cursed so softly, a snapping branch
Seemed like a roaring avalanche.

Back in each forest, wood & spinney,
The trooper smothered the brown man's whimmy,
"Nuzzle your muzzle here, dear lass!
Patience! Patience! The time will pass!"

"Soon, lass, soon, we'll ride & ride
With ringing hoofs through the countryside!
Hard on the heels of the flying foe,
As we dreamed we'd ride three years ago!"

At Noon

Thou art my Tower in the sun at noon;
The shaft of shade upon my golden ray,
In painted space the healing note of gray,
The undertone in nature's pagan rune;
And like a wave lashed to the dying moon,
When old desire is haunting its old prey,
Thy strength subdues the forces that would slay,
And soft withdrawal brings, all starry-strown.

So doth the soul return to Truth's strong tower,
Pilgrim secure at last of its abode,
Hearing that voice as beautiful as morn;
Come to the heart of Silence, O my flower,
Out from the colored heat, the gleaming road,
Into the place where deathless light is born?

The End of The Road.

There's many a path your feet may take,
O'er hill or vale or plain,
By noisy streamlet or lonely lake
Where only the winds a murmur make,
And the silence falls like rain.

But wherever the foot of man may go,
Our shoulders bear their load,
In joy or sorrow, in mirth or woe,
There's an end to every road, we know,
And God's at the end of the road.

Inspiration.

A moment when the world is sunk in space,

Her Wish.

"Whatever else I wish," she said,
"I shall not ever wish me dead.
To lie so still—and not to know
When grasses stir and flowers blow!
Bright light and happy sound," said she,
"And changeful winds to blow for me!"

There fell, across her young heart's rush,
A strange and sudden hush.

O Breezes, blow your changefullest!
You cannot lure her from her rest.
O Flowers, spring! O Grasses, stir!
You shall not ever waken her.
Call, wild, and sweet, and wistfully,
She will not hear, O Bush and Tree!

For through the dark there stole along
A strange and quiet song.

The Indian Corn planter.

He needs must leave The trapping and the chase
For mating game his arrows are disposed,
And from the hunters Heaven turn his gaze
To win some promise from the downy soil

He needs must leave the lodge that wintered him
The ever-burning fires, the blanket bed,
The women's dulcet voices for the grim
Reality of laboring for bread.

So goes he forth beneath the planter's moon
With sack of seed that harbors large increase
His simple pagan faith knows night and noon
Heat, cold, seed time and harvest shall not cease

And yielding to his need - this honest soil
Brown as the hand that tills it, moist with rain
Teeming with ripe fulfilment true as God.
With fostering richness mothers every grain.

"The hairs of your head are all numbered."

God numbers them, His servants' hoary hairs,
Blanched for a termite, no longer set
In glory of a youthful Nazarene
Bare-headed in the sun, but fraught with cares
And fever, as each year our strength impairs,
And we are hit with arrows straight and keen
Of death's strong Angel, shooting hard between
To prove our tenuous how it holds and weaves,
"But not a hair shall perish," in the rage
Of wintry storms now near, which without ruth
Will cast our bark of life upon the shore
Of the immortal spirits, where old age
Drops from us, and the beauty of our youth
Returns, and we grow younger even more.

There is a beauty at the goal of life,
A beauty growing since the world began,
Through every age and race, through lapse and strife,
Till the fair human soul complete here span.
Beneath the waves of storm, that lash and burn,
The currents of blind passion that appal,
To listen and keep watch till we discern
The tide of sovereign truth that guides it all.
So to address our spirits to the height,
And so attune them to the valiant whole,
That the great light be clearer for our light,
And the great soul the stronger for our soul,
To have done this is to have lived, though Fame
Remembers us with no familiar name.

KILLED IN ACTION AT VIMY RIDGE, MARCH 1ST, 1917

I never thought that strange romantic WAR
Would shape my life and plan my destiny;
Though in my childhood's dreams I've seen his car
And grisly steeds
~~Drown my black steeds~~ flash grimly thwart
The sky.
Yet now behold a vaster, mightier strife
Than echoed on the plains of sounding Troy,
Defeats and triumphs, death, wounds,
laughter, life
All mingled in a strange complex alloy.
I view the panorama in a trance
Of awe, yet coloured with a secret joy;
For I have breathed in epic and romance,
Have lived the dreams that thrilled
me as a boy!
How sound the ancient saying is forsooth!
How weak is Fancy's gloss of Fact's stern truth!

Laddie! Laddie! Laddie! "Somewhere in France"
you sleep,

Somewhere 'neath alien flowers and alien winds that weep.

Bravely you marched to battle, nobly your life laid down.

You unto death were faithful, Laddie;
yours is the victor's crown.

Laddie! Laddie! Laddie! How dim is the sunshine grown,

As mother and I together speak softly
in tender tone!

And the lips that quiver and falter
have ever a single theme,

As we list for your dear, lost whistle,
Laddie, over the hills of dream.

Laddie, beloved Laddie! How soon should we cease to weep

Could we glance through the golden gateway whose keys the angels keep!

Yet love, our love that is deathless, can follow you where you roam,

Over the hills of God, Laddie, the beautiful hills of Home.

 Only my leaves of autumn,
 My autumn leaves, fell there
 For the wondrous spring was in me,
 And the life I gave at Passchendale
 Hid the life of morrow-year.

Pausy Royal

The Pausy, her brief summer
Spent and done,
In veil of purple shrouds
Her vesper face
Her dreams unmocked by any staring sun,
She holds, in hidden keeping,
her life's grace.

So, dear one passing, when the days have wrought
The end, and gently beckon
you apart,
Keep of us who so loved you
one sweet thought,
Like Pausy, treasured in a brooding heart.

A Soldier's Shrines

Two secret shrines there are for me:

The one a wayside calvary,
 Low-canopied by fir and pine
 And thither oft I steal away,
 Kneel penitent & pray
 Christ grants forgiveness, free, divine;
 And Mary Virgin, grace benign;
 And John his tender charity.

O Welcome wayside calvary,

O calm, secluded shrine,

O sweet retreat of mine,

Whose holy peace brings blissful sacra-ry!

And this shrine for me there is,

Recessed, inviolate, within
 The ruby chamber of my Love's pure heart;
 And only I, ~~that~~ her dwelling, I wis,

May only enter in,
 And supplicate & worship there apart.

O spare her dear remembered Image now,
 Unworthy worshipper, I bow:

Her winsome graces are my Creed;

Her low, meek speech, my ~~act~~ ^{act} ~~any~~ ^{any};

Her tender thoughts, my ~~to say~~ ^{to say};

And her Absolve to, my strength for holier deed
 O Heart of Mine, O Heart of Mine,
 Whose secret chamber is my constant shrine!

Tremble! ye signallers, every man,
Under the glance of Corporal Dan!
Brand new clothes from tip to toe -
- All dressed up, and no place to go -
Looks like a scarecrow up the line
But back in billets it's polish and shine.
- When the photographer turned his crank
Dan struck an attitude - "beaucoup swank"
Exposed his flags and stripes and knife,
And the camera took him true to life!

The Pioneers

Our fathers toiled, but in a glorious fight;
The God of nations led them by the hand;
With pillared smoke by day and fire by night—
They wrought like heroes in their promised land,
The wilderness was conquered by their might;
They made for God the marvel He had planned—
A land of homes where toil could make men free,
The final masterpiece of Destiny.

Purple Violets.

Violets in purple mourning
Blommed as flakes of driven snow,
Leaving a rugged path adorning
Ere the Saviour knew its woe.

When the Virgin Mother, holy,
In her bitter anguish passed,
O'er the blossom white and lowly,
Was her sacred shadow cast;

And the agony of sorrow,
Falling like a purple pall,— Unforgotten with the morrow —
Still doth linger o'er all.

In Flanders Fields

In Flanders fields the poppies grow
Between the crosses, row on row
That mark our place : and in the sky
The larks still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead . Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved, and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders fields .

Take up our quarrel with the foe :
To you from failing hands we throw
The Torch : be yours to hold it high !
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields .

Thou of the wild impassioned brain
Who poured thy heart in bloody rain
And was by thine own passions slain
Oh who thy sorrow can compute
O'er all the bitter bitter fruit
Of instincts trampled underfoot
For there's an angel sits above
Guarding the sanctities of love
That doth all levity reprove

Cold natures never can compute
The terrible lifelong dispute
Souls such as thine wage with the brute
And thus it is we often see
Good men all void of charity
For souls tossed on a raging sea
For here we have had all along
One ^{measure} standard for the weak and strong
And surely surely we are wrong

The Shepherd.

Among the hills of night my thoughts
Go wandering lost and torn;
No rest they find, or gleam of light
To solace them till morn:
Stumbling they fare, and know not where
Safe pasturage to win:
Oh, Shepherd Sleep, across the steep
Go out and call them in!

An errant flock, they follow far
By bitter pools of tears,
Lured on by Memory's lonely voice
And tracked by stealthy fears;
But wanderings cease, doubt sinks in peace,
If once the fold they win;
Oh, Shepherd Sleep, across the steep
Go out and call them in!

So purified from self and isolation,

WILSON MacDONALD

AUTHOR OF "THE SONG OF THE PRAIRIE LAND AND OTHER POEMS."

A Song to the Singers.

Should you descend the stairway of old time,
And search the webbed wine cellars of the years,
The breaking of each vessel of sweet rhyme
Will make most merry music for thine ears.
No time is dead that gave the world a song
The larger hours were wet with music's flagon,
And half the garlands of the brave belong
To runes that calmed the courage of the dragon

The clouds that flowed o'er robust Rome have found
Another prop to lean on than her stone
But in the heart of music still abound
Sweet traces of her tragic poet's tone
And yonder tower that crowds the ampler air
Shall dream in dust before my rhyming story.
But those who build arise where eagles dare
I'll mount, on this white page, to surer glory.

What arrow ever pierced a traitor's crown
That winged not out from some fair singer's heart?
What courage on the ramparts of a town
But fired its vigor with our choicest art?
Tomorrow one shall ride the steel-lipped way,
Or fold his arms when mast and helm are sinking,
Who wandered by the muses full to-day
And roused his valor at my fountain drinking.

AUTHOR OF "LAYS OF THE TRUE NORTH," ETC.

The Warders Of The Seas.-Aug. 4-5 1914

In the solemn midnight watches, while the land ^{asleep,} ~~big fast~~
 And silence broods o'er peaceful fields and farms,
 The battleships of Britain ride forth upon the deep,
 To meet the bristling Titans—the boast of London arm;
 —And Britain's troth to keep!

They guard a nation's honour, an Empire's future hold.
 Millions of hearts are praying for their prowess and their
 With burning hopes full-freighted for a yet untold power,
 Of Peace and Freedom, pressed from England's faithful shore
 —They speed on—stern and bold;
 Lord of Nations! Who shall shatter a proud Armada's might Be their shield and unseen Vanguard? With one voice a
 "God and the Right!"—their cry—no more than for the fight,
 To win for Man and Freedom, whereto their standard flies,
 The Triumph of the Right!

II

Oh mariners of Britain!—Four years later.
 Ye heard the sudden summons to the strife,
 That sped you to the trackless seas to curb the haughty
 To guard Britannia's honour—and her life!
 Your charge ye took whole-hearted;—one trust before you lay
 Great Dreadnought or small fishing-smack, the Freedom
 Of hearts of struggling Nations ye stood for strength and stay,
 Peace failing in the bulwarks of the day,
 On quarterdeck or mast-head—fog-bound, or clearest tressel
 While the mountain waves larger hissing o'er the deck,
 Unbasting and unresting—your brave men held their post,
 Or calmly went down, singing, mid the wreck,
 Through moonlight or through starlight, your task was done;
 Never-ending was your faithful watch and ward,
 From the flash of day above, till sank the golden sun,
 Neath the mighty waste of waters that ye guard.
 For you there's no Genghis, to strike one fatal blow
 For the flag that braves the battle and the breeze;
 But ye keep undimmed, the glory of Britain's Island story,
 And—by God's grace,—the freedom of the Seas!
 Legions March! March!

Killed In Action

My father lived his three-score years; my son lived twenty-two;
One looked long back on work well done, and one had all to do —
Yet which the better served his word, I know not, nor do you!

To one, Life chattered all her lore, till he grew wise and gray,
To one, she whispered only, ere she turned her face away —
Yet which her deeper secret held only they two might say.

Peace gave my father restful days, with love and game for wage;
War gave my son an unmarked grave, and an unwritten page —
Who shall declare which gift conveyed
The greater heritage?

The Banner of England
 The banner of old England flows
 Triumphant on the breeze;
 A sign of truce to our foes
 The meter of the dead -
 A thousand heroes bore it,
 In the battle fields of old;
 All nations quailed before it,
 Defeated by the bold -

Brian Edward and his gallant sons,
 Beneath its shadowed fold;
 And lion-hearted Britons
 That flung to glory led
 The sword of kings defended,
 When hostile foes were near;
 The sheet whose colors blended
 Honourably proud and dear -

The history of a nation
 Is blazoned on its page;
 A brief and bright relation
 Sent down from age to age.
 Bright banner of our native land
 Bold hearts are knit to thee;
 A fearless free determined band
 Thy champions yet shall be!

The cradle of my heart is rocked;
I dwell in realms beyond the earth;
The portal I meant is never locked!

Men call me dreamer—thus forsooth
Because I sum each trump of doom,
And count the steps that lead us up
A ladder's toil a round of loss.

Men call me dreamer—nay, that word
Hath turned its way from lip to lip;
Its light shone o'er Judea's hills
And thrilled the heart of seer and sage.

Men call me dreamer—yet forget
The dreamer lives a thousand years,
While those whose hearts and hands knead clay
Live not beyond their dusty biers.

Apple Blossoms.

Shy, amorous,
The brown-haired dryads of the apple trees
I saw this day.
Shy were they in among the blowing blossoms;
Their white knees
Hidden by blossom tapestries
The wind had woven, weaving cunningly.
Yet their arms and faces,
And shoulders bloomy pink, by swaying spray
I saw, and their long glances,
In the sunny garden places
Where the sunlight dances,
Held me in sweet trances;
While they begged me come to play,
Bathe with them in blossoms,
On a white spring day!

Time has no more than this, —
A leaf.

Out of the battled years,
The glory and the wrong,
Time gives, for all our tears, —
A song.

Is it of fragrance made,
Woven and rhymed of light,
The voice that from some shade
Silvers the night?

When the last shadows slope,
And day's own rose is pale, —
O love, immortal hope, —
His nightingale!

The Wheat's Reward.

Out of the ground I rose; the seed seemed dead,
But lo! a slim green arm pushed through the sod,
And by and by before my mother, God,
I stood full ripe. A voice cried "Give us bread."
The wind of God went by; I bowed my head,
And one approached who held a curved knife,
And for the life of men he took my life,
And ever since by me are millions fed.

And then God spake these words: "O blessed weed,
The lowly sister of the lily proud,
Be thou my chosen messenger to shroud
The mystery of my Son, the Woman's Seed.
Thou darest not the sacrificial knife;
Be thou to dying men the Bread of Life.

On the Marshes

Out on the marsh in the misty rain,
The air is full of the marsh refrain;
The long swamps echo the beat of wings,
The birds are back in the reeds again.

Down from the north they wing their way,
Out of the east they cross the bay.
From north and east they're steering home
To the inland ponds at the close of day.

Hid in the sea of reeds we lie
And watch the wild geese driving by;
And listen to the plover's piping,
The gray snipe's thin and lonely cry.

All day over the tangled mass
The marsh-birds wheel and scream and pass;
The smoke hangs white in the broken rice;
The feathers drift in the water-grass.

The Reckoning.

Ye who would reckon with England —
Ye who would sweep the seas
Of the flag that Rodney nailed aloft
And Nelson flung to the breeze —

Weigh well your metal and valour,
Count well your ships and your guns,
For they who reckon with England
Must reckon with England's sons.

Ye who would hurl to warfare
Your hordes of bullies and slaves
To crush the pride of an empire
And sink its fame in the waves,
Count well your ships and battalions
~~then~~ Count well your horse and your gun,
For they who reckon with England
Must reckon with England's sons.

Ye who would reckon with England!
Ye who would break the might
Of the little isle in the foggy sea
And the lion-heart in the fight! —

Weigh well your metal and valour,
Count well your ships and your guns,
For they who make war on England
Make war on a mother's sons!

The Heaven of Love.

I rose at midnight & beheld the sky
Down thick with stars, like grains of golden sand
Which God had scattered loosely from his hand
Upon the floorways of his house on high;
And straight I pictured to my spirit's eye
The giant worlds, their course by wisdom planned,
The weary waste, the gulfs no sight hath spanned,
And endless time for ever passing by.

Then, filled with wonder & a secret dread,
I crept to where my child lay fast asleep,
With chubby arm beneath his golden head.
What cared I then for all the stars above?

One little face shut out the boundless deep,
One little heart revealed the heaven of love.

"Pray without ceasing"

What a Friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear!
What a privilege to carry
Every thing to God in prayer!

Oh! what peace we often forfeit,
Oh what needless pain we bear!
All, because we do not carry
Everything to God in prayer.

Have we trials, and temptations?
Is there trouble everywhere?
We should never be discouraged:
Take it to the Lord in prayer.

Are we cold and unbelieving,
Cumbered with a load of care?
Here the Lord is still our refuge:
Take it to the Lord in prayer.

Shameless, but oh so fair!
I bade her sit in the model's seat,
And I painted her sitting there.

I hid all trace of her heart unclean;
I painted a babe at her breast;
I painted her as she might have been
If the Worst had been the Best.

She laughed at my picture
And went away;

Then came with a knowing nod,

A Connoisseur, and I heard him say
" 'Tis Mary, the Mother of God."

So I painted a babe round
her hair,
and I sold her and took

And she hangs in the

Dreams

Keep thou thy dreams though faith should faint and fail,
 And time should loose thy fingers from the creels;
 The vision of the Christ will still abide
 To lead thee on to truth and tender deeds.

Keep thou thy dreams through all the winter cold;
 When woods are withered and the garden grey—
 Dream thou of roses, with their hearts of gold,
 Beckon to summers that are on their way.

Keep thou thy dreams, — the tissue of all things
 Is woven first of them; grow dreams are made
 The precious and imperishable things
 Whose loveliness lives on — and does not fade.

Life and death the shadows falling

Weep, waves of England! nobler clay
Was ne'er to nobler grave consigned;
The mild waves weep with us to-day
Who mourn a nation's master-mind,

We hoped an honored age for him,
And ashes laid with England's great;
And rapturous music, and its divine
Deep hush that veils our Toint of State.

But this is better Set him sleep
Where sleep the men who made us free,
For England's heart is in the deep,
And England's glory is the sea,

Leap, waves of England! Braastful be,
And fling defiance in the blast;
For Earth is envious of the sea
Which shelters England's dead at least,

Knit thyself close, memorial grass,
Green be and strong O sacred Sod
And, lest a careless Traveller pass
Unmoved, let every hidden clod
Enriched by this once radiant frame,
Beneath the ripple of a mound,
Pour out such echoes of his name
That they shall reach him - underground:

Unmarked - save on the deathless page -
He heard, he hastened, fought and fell
For a swift privileged heritage
So late perceived, but loved so well
That this mute clay, half man, half boy,
In some divine awakening caught,
Set it against all dreams and joy
And died in rapture at the thought:

Earth hath her dumb and poignant moods,
Her ancient passions of regret,
And with elusive pity broods,
Though man himself too soon forget:
No chill oblivion enters where
Her slumbrous eyes for death alone,
Not solitary is he there -
Who rests with her rests not alone

L'après

There is no absence, though indeed it seems
That in a distant-land you sometimes stray,
Shut far from me by mountains and by streams
I, nonetheless, feel your presence night and day
Your cheek next mine rests all throughout my dreams!

There is no absence, though mile after mile
Stretches between your clinging hands and mine,
In my wear of light I see your smile,
From my shadow watch your dark eyes shine
And feel our love over-reaching all exile!

Death is but so-called absence, long drawn out
Wherein your spirit swoops to mine again,
Undimmed by distance and unmarred by fear
Unfettered by the accident of pain!
My Own! My dear! the distance - There - or Here?

Of a rose is here —

The purest form of grief
Is a sunbeam's tear.

The airman who is slain

Has a petal shroud

And he feels the gentle rain

From the mourning cloud.

Where comrade sunbeams leap

In the open shade,

Where the hero fell asleep

With a smiling face.

EDWARD WILLIAM THOMSON

AUTHOR OF "THE MANY-MANSIONED HOUSE AND OTHER POEMS,"
"OLD MAN SAVARIN," ETC.

From
The Willow Whistle.

A day when April willows fringed the pool
Of fifty years ago with freshening gold.
Myself came trudging from the country school
With my tall grandsire of the wars of old;
His peaceful pen-knife trimmed a ravished shoot,
Nicked deep the green and hollowed out the white,
To fashion for the child a willow flute,
His age exulting in the shrill delight;
"For so", he said, "my grandsire made
The sweetest whistle ever blew,
When I and he were you and me
And all the world was new."

Now grandson "Billy" snuggles palm in mine.
"Over the hills", he blows, "and far away".
O pipe of bready, how clear and fine
Thy single note salutes the yearning day!
The breeze in branches bare, the whistling wing,
The subtle-bubbling frogs, the blue-birds call,
The quivering sounds of ever-piercing Spring,
That one thin willow note attunes them all;
And, far and near at once, I hear
The sweetest whistle ever blew,
Lilting again the olden strain,
And all the world is new.

AUTHOR OF "CANADA AND OTHER POEMS," ETC.

From: "The Little Things"

The little tender blades of grass,
 The tiny buds of green,
 The shoots, the fronds that in a mass
 Beneath the moss are seen;
 The delicate, untempered growth
 That every forest bears,
 As if the very Earth were loath
 To advertise her wares,—
 Are still as beautiful, as dear
 To Him who gave them life
 As any bloom that does not fear
 The highway and the strife.

The hidden, gentle thoughts that rise
 Like wind blown scent of flowers
 Wafting their incense to the skies
 Endowed with secret powers
 To charm, to soothe, to drive away
 The rough, uncouth veneer
 Of unkind moods that try to slay
 With barb or pointed spear,—
 How we should welcome them! & know
 From whence their sweetness springs—
 To set the happy heart aglow,
 To give the Spirit wings.

ALBERT DURRANT WATSON

AUTHOR OF "IN THE HEART OF THE HILLS," "THE WING OF THE WILD BIRD,"
"LOVE AND THE UNIVERSE," "THE SOVEREIGNTY OF CHARACTER," ETC.

From "The Aureole" Heart of The Hills.
By Albert Durrant Watson.

Friend of The Steadfast heart,
When day is done
And night falls westward,
After all these stern restraints of will,
In that glad hour
When kind, mysterious Death
Rides down the wind
And hurricanes of flame
Unloose our wings
To the great life beyond,
Then crush me to your heart
And I will fold you
As a flower to mine
Before the face of God.
And we shall mount
In chariot of the blast
To heights of ecstasy and power,
The stern, dark beauty of the SKY
Unveiled to open view
In one tremendous storm-betrothal
To Love's immortal Youth.
In that new love-land of our dream,
Where violet odours
With the wild thrush-music blend
Beside the singing streams,
I'll lay Love's Aureole upon your brow
And love you as I love you now.

Legacies

Unto my friends I give my thoughts,
unto my God my soul,
unto my foe I leave my love —
That is of life the whole.

Now, there is something,
a trifle, left:
Who shall receive this dower?

See, Earth Mother, a handful of dust,
Turn it into a flower
